All foam is not created equal

Why natural latex foam? Why not polyurethane foam, which is less expensive? The answer is simple: well-made latex foam is far more elastic and durable, without the noxious chemical content.

Polyurethane foam has more rigidity, and tends to compress more quickly. And it is made with chemicals which remain in the mattress — chemicals you then breathe in while you sleep. Additionally, latex foam is naturally anti-microbial and more breathable.

Our Serene mattress is comfortable and supportive, with a stretch cotton cover quilted to wool over a latex foam core. With seven ergonomic zones, it contours to fit the shape of the body.

Natural and durable with near-zero motion transfer

Our Serene mattress feels solid and substantial without seeming rigid. It has a quiet, motionless feel, and is dense and supportive, yet yields to contour to the body. The Serene mattress provides comfort and longevity the natural way: through a solid core of latex rubber foam. Unlike other so-called “latex” mattresses, which may contain synthetic foams or filler, our Serene mattress is all natural. In addition, it does not contain harmful chemicals. It has elasticity, yet holds its shape over time. Complete your Serene mattress by adding a flexible slat system to provide even more give and adjustable support.
